We Can Audit Anything – but Not Everything

There are times when internal audit clients and others have unrealistic expectations about our profession. It’s not surprising then that there may be confusion about our role — after all, internal auditors wear many hats. We are analysts, controls experts, consultants, teachers, business partners, watchdogs, financial advisers, compliance experts, and more. We truly can audit almost anything. While some risks clearly require additional expertise to audit, as I said in an earlier blog "you don't have to be a clown to audit the circus." However, it's important to remember that, while we might be able to audit anything, we can't audit everything.

Each time a major control breakdown makes headlines, someone inevitably asks, "Where were the internal auditors?" Often, the internal auditors were engaged and, in fact, did raise red flags in advance of the crisis. But the warnings were not addressed satisfactorily. Given the size and complexity of many organizations today, it would require an incredibly large internal audit function to address all of the risks. Sometimes, there simply aren't enough internal audit resources to cover all significant risks and, yes, there also are times when internal audit overlooks a key risk that proves catastrophic.

At best, the internal audit function can only be as effective as the resources, training, and talent that are available. Internal auditors are not infallible, and given the realities of budgets and cost-justifications, we also cannot be omnipresent.

This can lead to expectations gaps and misunderstandings about what internal auditors can do or what is being addressed. A PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) study in 2012, for example, found a large gap between the perceptions of internal auditors, audit committee chairs, board members, and senior management regarding how their companies manage fraud and ethical risks. The study, Aligning Internal Audit: Are You on the Right Floor?, showed that 53 percent of audit committee chairs, board members, and senior management thought fraud and ethics risks were well managed, while only 35 percent of CAEs shared that sentiment.

In PwC's Boardroom Direct monthly newsletter, Peter Tickner, a U.K. consultant on corporate governance and fraud issues, cites differences of opinion over who is responsible for fraud deterrence and for setting and assessing ethical culture. Tickner's quote: "Top management was convinced that one of the key roles of the chief audit executive was to deal proactively with the risks around fraud and corruption, whereas generally the CAEs saw it as senior management's problem and responsibility."

If Tickner is right, we need to hold a few more conversations regarding roles and responsibilities within the "Three Lines of Defense."
Unfortunately, our stakeholders sometimes want more assurance than we may be able to provide. A good example is in the area of information security. Another PwC study, the recently released 2015 Global State of Information Security Survey, found a 48 percent increase (to 42.8 million) in the number of detected security breaches worldwide. That's huge, and obviously internal auditors at those organizations could not have given absolute assurance about their organizations' cybersecurity controls. When it comes to risks and controls, we provide important assurances, but we cannot give unlimited assurance. And while providing assurance is an essential role of internal auditors, we must guard against giving false assurance.

Our clients' expectations are not developed in a vacuum. They may have unrealistic expectations simply because they have "selective hearing," but part of the problem also may be us. Expectations gaps can develop because of something we say or do, or the way we say it. Or they can result from our silence.

We all regularly explain what we can do for our organizations and how we can add value. It's important for stakeholders to understand the benefits of internal auditing, so we build such messages into our charters, our announcement memos, our opening meetings at the outset of engagements, and other communications. But while we may be good at explaining how internal auditing can help, perhaps we should spend just a little more time explaining the potential limitations in our capabilities, keeping in mind the old customer service mantra that we should "under-promise, then over-deliver."

There will always be risks, no matter what internal audit does. Certain disasters are bound to happen, regardless of the number or quality of internal auditors protecting our organizations. When crises hit, all eyes in the organization may turn to internal audit to assess causes and consequences. The Lady Antebellum song "I Run to You" says it well: "This world keeps spinning faster into a new disaster, so I run to you." It is natural that management and the board turn to us following a risk or control failure. As much as we can try to assess key risks in advance of failures, we can't audit everything. That's a message that bears emphasis in setting key stakeholder expectations.

What are your thoughts on minding and monitoring stakeholder expectations?

Program and Event Planning

How do we establish our professional development program and topics?

Our approach is multi-faceted. Primarily we try to schedule and deliver the programs that you tell us you want to see, based on our annual member and non-member survey, our annual CAE survey, and feedback that we receive on our post event surveys. To add to this we look at various annual studies such as the PwC State of the Internal Audit Profession and the IIA's Pulse of the Profession to try and determine where our profession says we should be going and what we, as Internal Auditors, should be interested in learning about.

Why don't topics appear timely?

There’s a gap between determining what our members want to see, finding a speaker to deliver that topic, determining if we can afford that speaker, and then arranging the event itself. We plan and schedule our speakers about 6 months in advance (as noted below) so the nearer time slots may already be allocated for a different topic. Sometimes these speakers, especially if they are international or on the ‘conference tours’, are booked out well beyond that horizon and may not be available within the next 4-6 months or not in the timeframe where we have a venue available.

Why doesn't the topic you really wanted ever seem to get offered?

As part of analyzing the surveys mentioned above, we look for topics that interest the most members. For example, Fraud Risk Assessment (FRA) was mentioned by 7 members and 4 non-members as their primary interest for the coming year. We will be looking at bringing that topic to Victoria as soon as practical.

A topic that interests a greater number of (primarily) members and (additionally) non-members is most likely to get attention on our annual plan. So one reason for why topics may not appear is that you may be the only one who has expressed an interested in that topic, and unfortunately we need to try and focus on those topics that meet the needs of the most members. Another reason you may not see a topic offered is that we simply can’t find a speaker locally and we can’t bring one in at a cost that the chapter funds can bear, especially when we look at luncheon events which are aimed at break-even delivery.

Why do we schedule the events the way we do?

We book our venue, the Union Club, 12 months in advance. The Union club is used by many organizations in town for their events so we need to book far in advance to reserve the dates we want. This is usually the 3rd or 4th Thursday of the month. Once we have our venue confirmed, our program team then determines the topics for each event. We try and arrange for our speakers 6 months in advance.
Why do we try and find speakers 6 months out?

Many of our speakers are not professional speakers; they have full time jobs. We need to give them time to get approval from their employers to present, and to then prepare the presentation itself. We also need to obtain commitment for speakers before we get to the advertising and registration stage. Before you see our first mail out, we have determined the topic outline, obtained a bio for the speaker, and in most cases have made travel and accommodation arrangements.

How do we find speakers?

For luncheons, our first approach is always to try and find local experts that can speak to a given topic. On very rare occasions, we have volunteers step forward ready to speak on certain topics, but mostly, we network with our members and use our board members business connections to find such local speakers. Next we branch out to our sister Chapter in Vancouver to see who may have presented to their chapter at recent events. From there we go further abroad as needed, communicating with the Program chairs across all Canadian chapters. So why stay local? – To a great extent, the costs.

For seminars, we review the courses and speakers available through the IIA, either the North American Board (IIA NAB) or IIA Canada (IIAC). These tend to have a high delivery costs because they use professional speakers, as much as $6000 per day in addition to chapter costs for venues, meals, etc. As such they tend to be prohibitively costly for our members. We can’t deliver them at a cost that many of our members can bear. Where possible we try to work directly with professional speakers to deliver events at much more favorable rates, such as we were able to do with our 2013 Critical Thinking event held in Victoria and Nanaimo where we leveraged the speaker’s holiday plans in Seattle.

We also work with the Vancouver chapter and Vancouver affiliates to try and bring speakers to Victoria a day before or after their scheduled visit to the Vancouver. As a much larger chapter, the Vancouver chapter has a better ability to bring in national or international speakers and we are occasionally able to offer a session at a reduced cost by bring the speaker ‘across the water’ as an add-on presentation to their schedule. We were able to bring Tiffany Case over earlier this year to offer a Fraud Primer as she was scheduled to present to the Vancouver ACFE. Our costs were her speaker expenses and the costs of a slight diversion in travel.

Why there are deadlines for registration and costs for cancellations?

There are several constraints on our speaking events. We have cancellation deadlines for the Union Club if we need to cancel an event. This is both for the venue itself and for the meals we arrange. We have to commit to a certain number of meals about a week in advance of the event, and the chapter is charged for those meals whether someone showed up to eat it or not. There is a set minimum charge for the room, so if it looks like we will not get enough attendees’ we may have to cancel the entire event and release the room booking (cancelling an event is always a last resort). We also may have commitments to pay for speaker travel and expenses. At certain points we have committed the chapter to costs and we have to cover those costs.
Why do I keep referring to costs?

The IIA VI is a non-profit chapter. We try and offer all luncheon events at a break even. Basically, what we charge for a luncheon pays for the meal, a lunch for the speaker and host, a gift card, and fees for our registration and payments systems. If we get our usual 25 attendees, we may not break even and run the luncheon at a slight loss. If we get our maximum attendance of 50 people, we may bring in a profit of $100 for the chapter. We offer all of our luncheons as a non-profit proposition as part of our mission and vision of “Progress through Sharing” and to deliver value to our members professional education requirements.

Our chapter does, however, make profit on our annual fraud awareness program and occasionally on full day seminars (this is not always the case as we did subsidize the half day Fraud Primer we offered in July). We make these profits while still keeping costs at $300 per day, which is in line with or less than one day events offered by affiliates or other chapters. We are actually quite proud of our ability to keep our events highly cost-competitive.

For the most part we use our profits to administer the chapter (such as annual financial review fees) and to subsidize additional special events or luncheons where we our members receive free attendance (our AGM and several luncheons from earlier this year) or to bring in speakers from Vancouver (where we cover travel expenses) or even for special paid speakers (such as “The Brain Guy”) at the usual luncheon fees. So it’s not all about the money, but the chapter does have to operate as an ongoing concern.

Note that board members are volunteers and are not paid – all profits are used to support the chapter and its members.

I hope this has provided some insight on our program planning process and why things seem to work the way they do. Rest assured that we are continually trying to improve our program delivery. Adjusting our program where possible, or adding events to bring timely topic to the chapter.

If you have any questions or even better, if you have a topic that you feel is timely and you would like to present, please contact any board member associated with the programs team, as noted on our Chapter Board for 2014-2015 page at the end of this newsletter.

Do you have a great topic that you want to share with members of profession, and with out affiliates who attend our events?

In 2013-2014 we achieved GOLD Status for the 7th consecutive year. We need to do this three more time in the next four years to attain PLATINUM status. Following is our 2014-2015 progress.

As at the end of November, we have not quite achieved the minimum CAP requirements in Chapter administration. This isn’t unusual as this category involves activities throughout the year (which started June 2014). However, we are firmly on track to make the minimum targets before the end of the year. In terms of overall points, we would have already achieved GOLD (if we had met minimums) status for the 8th year.
